Full Bio

Lyndsey Philipps is not choosing between lanes — she's creating her own. As a full-time athlete training at the Anthony Harris Tennis Academy, she competes internationally on the ITF Junior Tour and represents a new wave of global Gen Z athletes. Her multicultural background, deep-rooted connection to nature, and editorial presence make her a unique voice rising from Southern Africa.

With selective bookings for high-end campaigns and a growing media presence, Lyndsey's modeling reflects discipline, strength, and expressive stillness — often captured between training sessions and international tournaments. Her time in the bush, walking alongside rangers, and her family's legacy in wildlife protection ground her in purpose.

In 2024, Lyndsey made the main draw of the U14 Junior Orange Bowl in Miami — one of the most prestigious junior events globally. That same year, she received official recognition from Tennis South Africa as #4 in her age group and had the honor of competing under the South African flag. She was also cast in the Education First (EF) Global Campaign as a youth model — marking her second international brand feature at age 15.

She balances her full-time tennis training with online academic studies through the Cambridge International program, maintaining discipline across sport, modeling, and education.

She's not leaving sport. She's expressing it.
